Elements plugins 1.5.1.20 Jul 02, 2014 Parents use Amazon.com to ship their children on overnight trips so that they can be at their own homes when they return. The process is a bit tedious, and clearly requires a boatload of confidence in Amazon's shipping system. That can make it a bit expensive if you're looking to buy your kid something big and heavy. So Amazon has now launched a $100 Amazon Key product, which lets a thief simply walk into your home, unlock the device, and then walk out with it.

Inside, the device is equipped with a code entry sensor, a timer, and a microphone. If you're feeling particularly paranoid, you can also set a passcode on the device, to prevent the whole process of unlocking the device, and then leaving. Don't get too excited -- these aren't the first such locks for your home. There are other products out there that are similar, including the relatively famous Kwikset Kevo (though that's not cheap either, at $190). As for this device, Amazon says it costs $100 plus tax, and that it arrives in 7 days. If it works as well as Amazon says it will, it could make a decent way of keeping your home secure while also making it easier for parents to send their kids on overnight trips. Today is a day in which I am both really blessed and really humbled. And to start, I am humbled, because all I want for me is to get older. I want to be older because I want to be so much more than I am, so that I can be better at me. I want to be more like Jesus, someone who at the age of 30 is more beautiful than a girl I saw at the age of 10. It's a deep desire, I know, but I feel like if I'm doing everything I'm
