I have a file that has a SHA1 hash. When I paste it to vim and press "shasum" it says: "The SHA1 hash of this file for the current system is [SHA1_HASH]". What does it mean? A: You are using shasum which is not meant to be used for SHA1s, but for MD5s. SHA-1 is a faster hash algorithm than MD5, because it uses $160$ operations instead of $128$. See the shasum manual page for more informations. A: What does it mean It means that shasum uses MD5 as a hashing algorithm for the file. You can get the MD5 hash of a file by using cat -v | md5sum You can get SHA1 hashes by using SHA-1 cat -v | sha1sum There is a reason it says that it uses the current system's SHA1, because it checks what the current system actually says. If you had another version of shasum installed on that system, it could produce a different hash. You need to make sure that you are using the same version of shasum that you used to calculate the SHA1s on your system
