Field of the Invention The present invention relates to digital television signal receivers and, more particularly, to an improved digital television signal receiver that uses a line-by-line decoding technique. 2. Description of the Prior Art The line-by-line decoding method (hereinafter referred to as LD method) has been proposed as a technique for improving the quality of a digital television signal receiver system. The LD method performs the correlation filtering processing for one line of the image data at a time, and requires only two correlation filters per horizontal line. This advantage allows for a smaller circuit size than conventional line correlation filter circuits. Therefore, the LD method is suitable for a digital television signal receiver. In order to correct the scrambling effect of the LD method, there are two approaches. One is to perform synchronization processing in the LD method for the horizontal lines and thereafter perform the decoding processing. Another is to perform the decoding processing and the scrambling effect correction processing in the LD method for the vertical lines and the horizontal lines, respectively. A digital television signal receiver has been proposed that uses the first approach, i.e., synchronization processing in the LD method for the horizontal lines and thereafter performs decoding processing for the vertical lines. In the case where there is a blackout in the vertical blanking interval of the digital television signal, an image is formed by displaying a narrow vertical line only. The image formed by the first approach can be viewed as a black line because the vertical lines for display are vertically distorted. When the reception signal of the whole period is to be displayed after the LD method is performed for the horizontal lines, there is a likelihood that the line display does not coincide with that of the television signal. Further, when the reception signal of the whole period is to be displayed after the LD method is performed for the vertical lines, the display of the image is disturbed and becomes a discontinuous line. In the case where there is a blackout in the vertical blanking interval and a vertical line narrower than the horizontal line display area is displayed when the frame 05a79ceef

Q: Error with Button.invoke in beta code I have this method (added on a RelativeLayout) final Button btn1 = (Button) v.findViewById(R.id.dummyButton); final Button btn2 = (Button) v.findViewById(R.id.dummyButton); btn1.setOnClickListener(new View.OnClickListener() { @Override public void onClick(View v) { btn1.invoke(v); } }); I installed the sdk 23 and I have this error at runtime: java.lang.ClassCastException: android.widget.RelativeLayout cannot be cast to android.widget.Button Why the view btn1 must be a Button? What do I do now? A: try this btn1.performClick(); instead of invoke A: The first thing to do is to make sure that your view is of type Button. Just have a look at the first line of your posted code snippet final Button btn1 = (Button) v.findViewById(R.id.dummyButton); If it is of type RelativeLayout, no wonder you get the ClassCastException because a RelativeLayout is not a Button. Note You can also select the Brush tool directly from the Tools panel's Brush menu. 3. In the tool options bar, shown in Figure 5-3, click the thumbnail of the Brush brush type*. The menu shown in Figure 5-3 appears. You can choose from three Brush types: Fluid, Gradient, and Pattern. Fluid and Gradient brushes create a seamless or overlapping paintlike effect, while Pattern brushes create a slightly pixelated or stained look.
