Q: How to check if object is image in javascript? I'd like to do the following in Javascript: if an object is an image (canvas) and no longer displays it's previous image, call a function. This is how I did it: `var img = new Image(); img.src = 'C:\Users\me\Desktop\CPA\graph/on.png'; var g0 = document.getElementById('graph'); var g1 = document.getElementById('graph2'); var g3 = document.getElementById('graph3'); var canvas = document.getElementById('graph_canvas'); g0.addEventListener('click', function () { canvas.src = img.src; }); g1.addEventListener('click', function () { canvas.src = img.src; }); g3.addEventListener('click', function () { canvas.src = img.src; });` I tried using `typeof` but it doesn't appear to work as intended, or it does but not when the object is an image: `if (typeof img !== "undefined" && typeof img.src !== "undefined") { alert(`image is missing`); }` A: `if (typeof img !== "undefined" && typeof img.src !== "undefined") { alert(`image is missing`); }` `typeof` will return object and object does not have `src` property, so undefined is returned. For accessing `src` property, `img.src` is the correct one . Resolts, Phys. Rev. Lett. [73]{}, 1205 (1994). R. H. Yang and T. A. Lane, Phys. Rev. Lett. [64]{}, 1150 (1990). T. A. Lane, Rev.
