Street Heat [Latest]

Little Nightmares is a new psychological horror adventure video game. You are Six, who finds herself on a journey in search of her sister. This journey takes you through a world submerged in water. It's been six months since the Royal Academy successfully completed their most advanced technological experiment in history. They jubilantly ended it by stating that they were closing their doors. That night, an accident befalls the girl who they had been studying, and now they need to open their doors once more to rescue the girl and investigate the accident. Six has no memory of who she is, and could be suffering from many things. There are many perils that lie ahead. The story will be in the middle of a "what-happens-next" story, while creating a strong narrative that will keep the player guessing. It's a purpose-driven narrative that unravels the world that Six enters. It's very challenging and intense, with a unique, hand-drawn art direction. You play as Six, a little girl who was caught up in the aftermath of the Royal Academy's unsuccessful experiment that took place six months ago. They jubilantly ended the project, stating that it was closing, but when the accident befalls the girl, who was the focus of their project, it becomes their duty to investigate and save her. You play as the player character in a hand-drawn artistic experience, which unfolds by drawing over the top. You take in the world through "narrative foresight," which combines the act of visual comprehension, imagination, and story. This package contains: •Six is a character who has no past and a horrifying future. •A horror game with a happy ending. •A gripping psychological experience. Play on Android smartphones and tablets. Runs on Windows 10. Read more about this game in the press release below: Recommended Products for this Game Welcome to Tamia's Collectables! What's new:

Everything I do now, but then, began with The God Awfuls. The Mighty Duncans, the Adventures in the Costumes of Soul, the millions that were spent making Huey a lackey, The Gremlins, and some fucking Crabby Rotten Movie of Hell with a puppeteer out to kill everything in sight. Those were the daily, weekly, monthly, and yearly rites of passage of my life. Living with a working actor had its opportunities — celebrity and freedom and many worlds seen — but it also brought with it some unwanted downside. Still, I was on the right side of “The Curse” so everything seemed to be ok, except that it’s not really how life works. Actors don’t live forever. They may be kings on Earth, but they eventually fade away like everyone else. Most conventional changes began to happen in 1984. I married — to a woman who liked me a lot but liked people even more — and I found work that I, and any sidekick actor out there, could be very proud of. My place in the world changed in the mid-1980’s. People saw me, and they began to love me, one way or another. In that, those years were ecstatic. And then I became an old man. And in my old age, there are less opportunities. I’ll be honest — I’d had shoulder surgery for the last three years of playing James as a younger guy, and doing the same on The Smurfs (although I’m sure the physical affect of staying so young would have varied significantly), I found the range of what I was willing to do, and that changed. But some people, those who loved the swashbuckling adventure of The God Awfuls, would argue that a good “star” has more latitude to do evil at times; that an old actor can “remember” the old ways more readily than most, as old fears become watered down from 5:00 PM reciting dialog in a bowl or small amount of water, they can come alive again and, yes, be just as wicked as they once were. (I always thought it was a Lovelace quote, but apparently it’s not). Anyway, The Smurfs is the most restrictive series I’ve been on in a long while, very reminiscent of The God Awfuls. It’

You are the best snowboarder on earth. Whether you're an Olympic medalist or the most accomplished professional, you have the unique ability to transform the snow with your artistic expression and unique abilities. No matter how low or high you go, you can control the world with our open-world ski/snowboard game. SNOW will not be a mass production game. All tools, including in-game characters, items, and everything in the game will be made in-house by developers, but our tools and training will only go so far. It is possible to create the character you want to play with, but it will take a lot of practice. As we develop the game, we will be offering more options to customize the character, including with clothing, props, and music. The development team includes the creator of the Tony Hawk's Pro Skater series, and the development team includes the former editor-in-chief of Game Informer, as well as a list of industry professionals you can read on our website. The choice is yours! Skate, snowboard, or play both! Team Team 7 Studios is an independent studio based in California, with experienced staff members having worked on a number of titles in the sports and action games genres. Team 7 Studios, together with Agatsuma Entertainment, plan to release SNOW on all available platforms. SNOW is an industry first title, being the first sports title to go to early access, allowing users to gain access to the game and help develop it, before the full version goes to market. In their words:Team 7 Studios' Games Policy The Team 7 Studios team has developed a very specific set of rules for our games and for our players. These are our rules and there's nothing wrong with them. Because we feel that our games are best supported by not having to find our way by trial and error, we have a set of rules that makes those mistakes easier to avoid. Our games are built with passion and have been developed over hundreds of hours from hundreds of unique contributors. We don't promise that our games will be perfect. But we do promise that they will be honest and all the time. For all that, we will do our best to see that our games never go free and we will love them all in our own way, as long as our players decide to play them.
