Q: How many ways can you get 30 out of 36? How many ways can you get 30 out of 36? What is the procedure for that kind of question? A: First, a note on what we're trying to do. Because the order in which the numbers appear is not important, this is combinatorics. In the usual meaning of the word, we're looking at order-independent objects—objects that are the same no matter which order they're in. We're taking numbers to be a kind of set, or ordered list—given a set, for instance, there's no difference between $\{x,y,z\}$ and $\{z,y,x\}$. Now to your question. So let W_1, W_2, \dots, W_n be the possible outcomes, where a set W_i represents what can be obtained when we choose the i th number. Now to count the total number of possibilities, count the number of different sets W_i , and add up. Since we're looking for all the possibilities, there are 3^n possible W_i . There are 2^n sets because we must choose whether to get \$30\$, \$31\$, ..., \$36\$ or \$37\$, ..., \$36\$, and n ways to choose which of those numbers we're going to get. Now we should check that we are not counting any repetitions. To do this, we need to figure out if two sets have the same number of elements. Recall from above that W_i is a set. So $W_i \cap W_j$ is the set of elements that have been chosen. Since the number of elements chosen is i for W_i and j for W_j , i
