the preamp is modelled to work on 100k ohm jack, the volume is great, so you can be in the moment, feeling the effect of the cabs without a lot of attention and you still have the possibility to use a headphone amplifier, a mixamp or an amp simulator. even though i'm still a novice at the amp modeling, i think that this is the best way to do it for beginners. as i said in my review of 2015, amp modelling is very important for any guitarist or bassist, and the best application to do it. i really love the fact that they are developing and improving the model of the tube amps, i think that makes it a very good learning tool, and really it is possible to model every single tube amp ever made. i think it is so important for a beginner to learn and know the amps that are the most used and the most important. i know that some people do that with tube amps, but it is really difficult to do, because they are very old models. if you have a mic in the amp, then you need to capture the right values for mic with the patchbay. you must do it in a real amp. i'm sure people will keep using them, but i think these days there are just far better choices than the satch. if you're looking to create a more authentic tube sound, the helix is a great option. the satch is a fine amp, but i'm guessing most people will be more happy with something like the roadkings, which are quite a bit cheaper and offer significantly more versatility. the jimmy page plugin is great with a tube amp because the jimmy page amp makes fantastic tube sounds. after i removed the jimmy page plugin, the only amp i can use was the satch and the helix is getting a little thin now. so, i was like fuck this shit, i was going to use an ampeg ampipe clone. i then realised that it doesn't output any distortion. i was shocked and a bit disappointed that the plugin does have a really good, cool tube sound, but it doesn't have any distortion, it is just amazing.
