You can create contacts quickly and easily. There is a database that can store more than 500 million contacts and it can create databases automatically.

ContactListView is the missing part in some CRM and Contact Management software. It helps you to create an overview of your contacts and it is essential to see the history of your contacts. But ContactListView is still missing in some CRM and contact management software. So we're trying to change this. The goal of ContactListView is to show a detailed view of the contacts.

The objective of this proposal is to facilitate the further development of a comprehensive, uniform, consistent, and widely used clinical classification system for peripheral neuropathies, the Charcot-Marie Tooth (CMT) classification. This classification system will be developed primarily by an international collaborative of experts who have experience in the clinical and genetic evaluation and care of patients with peripheral neuropathies, and who are members of the Consortium for Research in CMT (CRCMT). The proposed classification system will include neurophysiologic and genetic (molecular) information in addition to clinical information for classification. These clinical and laboratory data will be supplemented by the systematic collection of phenotypic and genotypic information from CMT patients in the International Consortium for CMT (ICCM) and US patients in the CMT Consortium (USCC). These two groups have already developed detailed disease-specific databases for CMT1A and CMT2F. The use of these databases for the collection of the patient data will greatly facilitate the classification process. The specific aims of the CMTUCC classification project are as follows: (1) To characterize the phenotypic characteristics of inherited peripheral neuropathies using a multidisciplinary approach with attention to the various subtypes of peripheral neuropathies. The phenotypic characteristics of the most common inherited peripheral neuropathies will be studied in detail, including the evaluation of the clinical, electrophysiologic, and histopathologic features in patients with CMT1A, CMT2A, HNPP, and CMT2B, and the CMT associated with systemic disorders. (2) To develop a comprehensive and widely used clinical classification system that will systematically and uniformly describe the phenotypic features of inherited peripheral neuropathies. (3) To investigate whether the clinical classification system for inherited peripheral neuropathies can be applied to hereditary motor and sensory neuropathies. The natural history and outcome of the most common hereditary motor and sensory neuropathies will be studied. (4) To examine the utility of the proposed classification system and classification database for clinical diagnosis, genetic analysis, research, and therapeutic trials. (5) To determine whether the proposed classification system and classification
