For instance, I prefer to check photos in batches of around 10 to 20. In this situation, the program is speedy and is able to process the photos within a few minutes. Unfortunately, this is not the case if you're processing hundreds or thousands of photos. In this situation, Lightroom can easily take from 5 to 15 minutes to process a batch of photos. Although the program includes wonderful functions for cataloguing your photographs, you can also create catalogues using two formats: hierarchical and filenet and you can do most of the things you can do with the basic toolbox. This toolset can also be expanded later. This is extremely important because Lightroom doesn't come with a basic toolbox, but with a pre-existing one, but this doesn't mean that you won't be able to extend its functions later. To create your own custom tools, simply right click on your file and select "Tools > Customize your tools" from the menu.
