Download Brunner amp Suddarth's textbook of medical surgical nursing. The present invention relates to a prepress method and apparatus. In the printing business, in general, the apparatus operation and a preparation process of printing are divided into separate processes. More specifically, apparatus operation is divided into the operation of image formation, the operation of printing, the operation of mounting the printed product, the operation of packing the printed product, and the like. On the other hand, the preparation process of printing is divided into the operation of sheet preprocessing, the operation of job setting, the operation of printing, the operation of sheet postprocessing, the operation of mounting the printed product, the operation of packing the printed product, the operation of shipping or reshipment, and the like. More specifically, the operation of sheet preprocessing, such as supply of paper, cutting, stacking, and the like, is independent of the operation of printing. Further, the operation of printing includes a plurality of operations, such as plate setting, plate printing, printing, mounting, packing, and the like. Since the operation of printing is divided as described above, the printing process must be performed by setting a prepress job which includes an operation of prepressing, such as sheet preprocessing and printing. Therefore, although a particular prepress operation can be performed according to the type of printing, the time required is long due to a complex combination of several different operations. In recent years, in the printing business, in particular, substantial changes have occurred in the manner of business. More specifically, there is a tendency to involve
