Read our The Essential Phone Review to get the lowdown on all these gadgetsAlabama Senate candidate Roy Moore could be indicted for sexual misconduct, his wife has said. After multiple accusations emerged of alleged child sexual abuse by Moore while he was in his 30s, Moore's wife has confirmed that her husband is facing 12 counts of child abuse -- including allegations that he pursued sexual relationships with several teenage girls while he was a deputy district attorney. Pamela, the Moore family spokeswoman, told "Good Morning America" on Wednesday that the former Alabama Supreme Court justice "probably will" be charged with a crime. "I don't know what the outcome is going to be, but you know, I'm not surprised that my husband would be indicted and probably will be prosecuted," she said. "We're gonna see what the outcome is." Moore's Republican opponent, former Auburn University football player Doug Jones, has accused Moore of holding evangelical Christian values back to support his political ideology, and the Democrat has tried to tie Moore to policies that include cuts to child care and increased funding of weapons. Moore ran a self-funded campaign, though numerous outside groups and wealthy donors have contributed to the retired Alabama Supreme Court justice. A statement from Moore's campaign on Wednesday featured remarks from former White House strategist Steve Bannon, who has been vocal in his support for Moore. "I have known Roy Moore since he was 34 years old. Throughout his public life he has always
